The first governor of New South Wales recognised the potential for winemaking on his arrival in 1788. From the first plantings, vineyards have now spread to every state in Australia. The transformation in the image of Australian wines has been rapid, it is now recognised in many markets as a significant producer of quality wines. This has been the result of heavy investment, from both within and outside of the country in both the planting of vineyards and construction of wineries with the most modern equipment.

Austrian wines are mostly dry white wines (often made from the Grüner Veltliner grape), though some sweeter white wines (such as dessert wines made around the Neusiedler See) are also produced. About 30% of the wines are red, made from Blaufränkisch (also known as Lemberger, or as Kékfrankos in neighbouring Hungary),

Chile

Chile is South America's most important and largest exporter of wine, with a total of 118 000 hectares planted in Chile with an approximate split of 75% varieties and 25% white. Chile's unique geographical and climatic conditions offer it many advantages over other wine-producing countries. The country is very long and thin, some 4500 kilometres from the Atacama Desert in the north, to the ice fields of Patagonia to the South, yet it is only on average 150 kilometres wide, with the land sandwiched between the high, snow-capped Andes Mountain range and the cold Pacific Ocean.

The United Kingdom is a major consumer of wine, although a minor grower and producer. Wine production in the UK has historically been perceived as less than ideal due to the cold climate, but warmer summers and grapes adapted to these conditions have played a role in increasing investment and sale of wines. Most is English sparkling wine, from vineyards across Southern England and sparkling wine from Wales where the climate is warmer than that of northern areas. Vineyards are becoming more commonplace in counties such as Essex, Sussex and Kent, where more varieties of wine can be produced due to the drier and warmer climate

HALF PENNY GREEN ESTATE, STAFFORDSHIRE

PENNY BLACK 11%

An aromatic, refined with elegant flavours. It's medium-dry and is recommended to be consumed chilled on its own, or with fish and light meats.

France today produces approx. 55 mill hecto litres of wine per year and is still regarded by many around the world as the leader in producing fine wine. More wine is imported into the UK from France than any other country and also accounts for approx. 1/4 of all UK imports. APPELLATION d'Origine Contrôlée (AC or AOC) is the highest level that a French wine can attain. Though the requirements may vary widely from one region to another, they are the most tightly defined. Few countries have such a long standing and developed wine culture as that of France and recognised to be amongst the best in the world.

A beautiful shell pink colour, this is elegant wine. Subtle notes of white peaches and citrus fruit, a nice freshness on the palate and good length on the finish.

Almost uniquely in the world of fine wine, some German white wines are light in body and alcohol and have residual sugar. They are ideal for social occasions or as a refreshing aperitif. They are also good matches with many food styles with many delicious pairings to be explored. Although a much-deserved renaissance has seemed imminent for some years, the medium sweet wines such as Liebfaumilch remain unfashionable. With climate changes Germany is becoming increasingly warmer, meaning that a greater percentage of wines each year are being produced in a dry style that is more popular with consumers.

Italy

Italy, with an annual production of nearly 5 billion litres, is together with France, one of the two giants of global wine production. Greek settlers introduced the vine to Italy as early as 800 BC and took to Italy's rugged countenance with zeal. The Greeks christened Italy 'Oenotria' or 'land of the vine' and by the time the Western Roman Empire collapsed in AD 476 every modern European region of production, except Bordeaux, has been established. Wine fuelled the excesses of generations of Roman emperors and Pliny, writing in the first century AD, introduced notions of the site selection and vine husbandry that remain relevant more than 2000 years later

It is often difficult to comprehend how small a player New Zealand is in the world of wine. If you consider the area it has under vines it just manages to make the top 50 countries of the world and in terms of production it has only just made the top 30. Non-New Zealanders control more than 85% of this and half the total production is in the hands of one international company. Because the domestic market for New Zealand is so small the wine industry has to rely on exporting, of which Britain is by far the most important export market

South Africa

South African wine has a history dating back to 1659 with Constantia, a vineyard near Cape Town, being considered one of the greatest wines in the world. Access to international markets has unleashed a burst of new energy and new investment. Production is concentrated around Cape Town, with major vineyards and production centres at Paarl, Stellenbosch and Worcester. Today South Africa exports around 450 million litres of wine, with over 100000 hectares of vineyard. The country is committed to sustainable wine farming and is the 9th largest producer of wine in the world. Chenin Blanc is the most widely planted variety in South Africa.
